DOING THE DISHES...

The Mass is a meal. It is the wedding feast of the Lamb. And just like a meal at your home, the dishes need to be done after the meal.

After Holy Communion, you'll see the Fr. Ray or Deacon John cleansing the vessels that were used for the distribution of Holy Communion. While this is done partly for sanitary reasons*, there is a much greater purpose for this cleansing ritual at Mass. As Catholics, we believe that the bread and wine truly became the Body and Blood of the Lord Jesus. It is precious beyond any earthly thing. So unlike an earthly meal where any excess food or drink may be tossed out, every bit of the Body and Blood of Christ must be consumed or reverently put back in the tabernacle. Obviously, for sanitary reasons, leftover wine must be consumed and not put in the tabernacle. You may see the Eucharistic Ministers consume any leftover wine. Only the host go into the tabernacle.

Before using a small cloth called a purificator to wipe the vessels clean, Father or Deacon will first consume any of the Precious Blood that is left in the chalice. They will also look for even the smallest crumb in the ciboria, on the paten and even on the altar cloth. If they find any, they consume them right away. Then each vessel is washed with water, which the priest then drinks. Only then are vessels wiped clean and put away for the next Mass.

Why does the priest take care of this task? If you had a meal at your house, you would never dream of letting the guests do the dishes, right? A good host takes care of that. So it is in God's house. (*And in case you are wondering, part of the duties of the Eucharistic Ministers is to wash the vessels in the sacristy again with hot soapy water and dry them before putting them away! This washing is purely for sanitary reasons.)
